My Grandfather Simon Wiesenthal

A Family Story to be Never Yet Told

Abstract

After his liberation from Mauthausen, Simon Wiesenthal, my late grandfather, was reunited with his wife Cyla Muller. They realised all too soon that all 89 of their relatives had been murdered. This is the notion we grew up with: “we have no family”. Over the years, I made multiple attempts to ask my grandparents about their family, but my notes remained almost empty. Upon the passing of Simon Wiesenthal, I renewed my efforts to explore our family roots and analysed personal letters and tombstones, as well as communicating with people sharing the name Wiesenthal and, most importantly, genealogy pals. This lecture focusses on the discovery of Simon Wiesenthal’s ancestors and their families. This search led to the establishment of a huge and robust family tree now shared with the public in various databases, and a story to tell to all those who are interested in the man who dedicated his life to bringing Nazi criminals and their collaborators to justice.

I spent time in Vienna since I was a child and until the age of 38, until the passing of my late dear grandfather Simon Wiesenthal. I enjoyed quality time in this city with my late grandparents, Cyla and Simon, and became familiar with its cultural sites, among them the Jewish Museum of Vienna.

In 2010, I met Dr. Spera for the first time here in Vienna at the joint Austrian-Israeli inauguration of a stamp carrying Simon Wiesenthal’s picture and his famous saying: “Justice, not vengeance”.

Since the passing of my grandfather, I have been personally in touch with both Béla Rásky from the Vienna Wiesenthal Institute and with Danielle Spera from the Jewish Museum, trying to come up with ideas to commemorate the tenth anniversary of Simon Wiesenthal’s passing.

We thought that it would be a great idea if I were to share with you my painstaking discovery of Simon Wiesenthal’s genealogy, including the 89 family members murdered in the Shoah. Please bear in mind two things, one personal and emotional and the second more pragmatic:

From a personal perspective, we grew up with the clear notion that we have no family.

In genealogy, no family means ‘no one to ask’, ‘no personal letters’, ‘no graves to visit’, nothing.

Simon

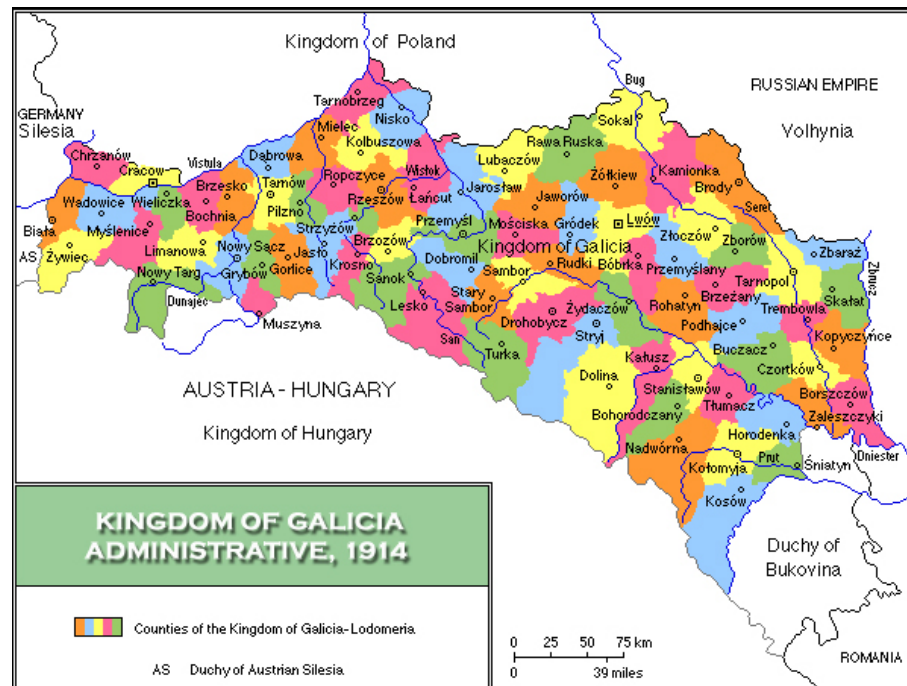

Simon Wiesenthal was born on 31 December 1908 in Buczacz, formerly Galicia, nowadays in the Ukraine, to Asher Hensel Wiesenthal and Rosa Rapp.

Simon Wiesenthal from Buczacz

In January 1961, 55 years ago, Simon Wiesenthal wrote a letter, one of many that he wrote in his life, to Mr. Kamerman from Kfar Ata, north of Haifa in Israel, stating that his parents lived in Buczacz and that his father was named Hensel.

Galicia, 1914

Galicia, officially the Kingdom of Galicia and Lodomeria, was in 1914 a part of the Austro-Hungarian Empire, and was bordered by the Kingdom of Poland and the Russian Empire: The town of Buczacz was located in the east of this territory, south-east of today's Lviv, the former capital of Galicia, at the time also known as Lwów in Polish and Lemberg in German.

Marriage 1936

In 1936, the 27-year-old Simon married Cyla Muller from Buczacz, born 1908
 Simon and Cyla lived in Lemberg.

Lviv/Lemberg is the city where Simon lived with his wife Cyla Muller, also a Buczacz, born in the same year.

Unification with Cyla, 1945

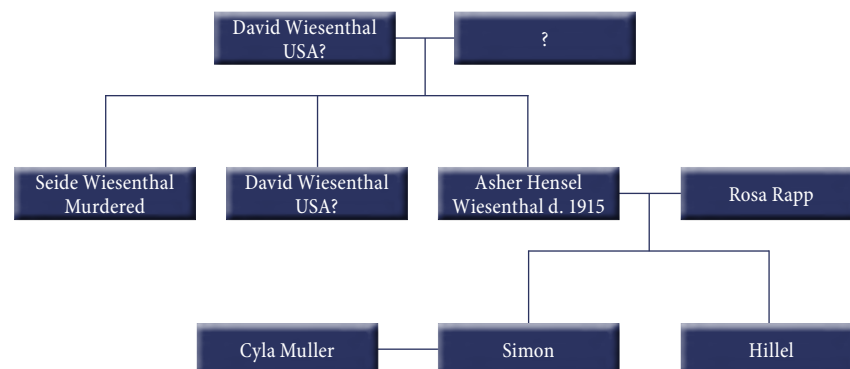

Simon and Cyla were re-united in 1945 and, a few months later, my mother Paulinka Rosa Paika was born. My mother was named after her two grandmothers, Rosa Rapp and Paika Dyck, who were both murdered in the Shoah. In my mother's naming, two of the 89 family members were commemorated.

Who were Simon and Cyla's 89 family members who were murdered during the Shoah?

Part II: 1999–2005

In 1999, when visiting Vienna with my mother, I came equipped with ninety Pages of Testimony (POT) from Yad Vashem and hoped to return there with the completed files. Unfortunately, and surprisingly, we only managed to complete a little over a dozen. Even at the age of ninety, my grandfather still had a phenomenal memory, yet there was still only very little information.

Simon mapping his family in 1999

Simon had a brother, Hillel, who died as a child. His father died when Simon was seven years old. Simon stated that an uncle Seide was murdered in the Shoah and that an uncle or maybe a grandfather named David had emigrated to the United States.

Simon Wiesenthal (1908–2005)

Simon Wiesenthal (1908–2005)

The only value of nearly five decades of my work is a warning to the murderers of tomorrow, that they will never rest" (From an interview with The Jerusalem Post International Edition, February 5, 1994)

Six years later, on 20 September 2005, Simon Wiesenthal died at his residence in Vienna, leaving behind a legacy for people to study and follow.

Statement from US President George W. Bush, 2005

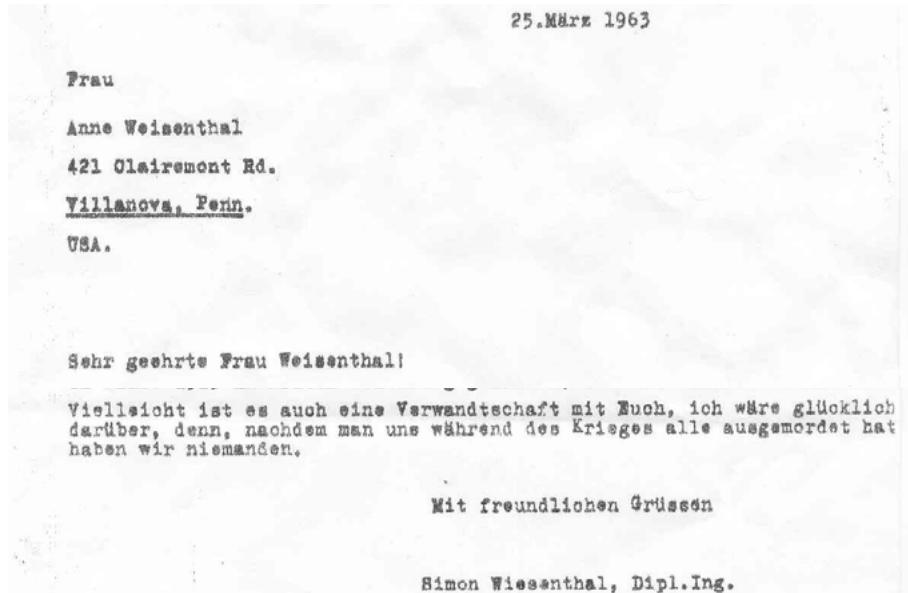

For Immediate Release
Office of the Press Secretary
September 20, 2005

“Laura and I are saddened by the death of Simon Wiesenthal, a tireless and passionate advocate who devoted his life in tracking down Nazi killers and promoting freedom. Simon Wiesenthal lost 89 relatives in the Shoah, yet he survived the death camps himself. He gathered intelligence to be used in war crimes trials and also passed on important information that led to the conviction of Adolf Eichmann. Throughout his long career, he relentlessly pursued those responsible for some of the most horrific crimes against humanity the world has ever known. Simon Wiesenthal fought for justice, and history will always remember him.”

The eulogy of the former president of the United States, George W. Bush, mentioned Simon Wiesenthal’s work and the fact that he had lost 89 family members but survived himself.

Brief 25. März 1963

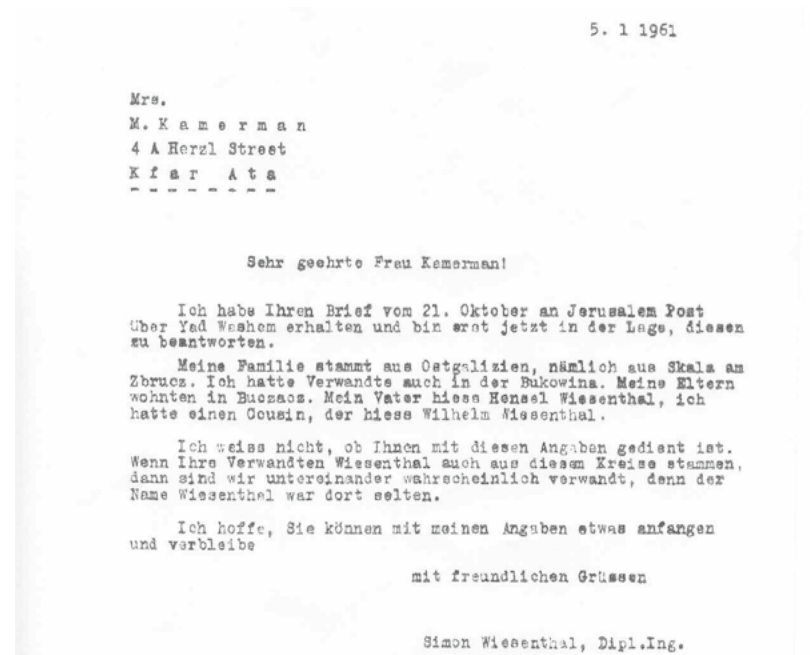

“... all our family members have been murdered and we are left with no one ...”
(Simon Wiesenthal to Anne Weisenthal, 25 March 1963).

Simon Wiesenthal stated this again in a personal letter to Anne Wiesenthal in 1963, a letter that was brought to my attention when the historian Tom Segev explored my grandfather’s archive in Vienna while writing his biography. All I asked for were the personal letters my grandfather exchanged to persons he called his “cousins” and to people carrying the same last name.

Part III: Simon's Uncles

With such sparse information, even a very simple research on ancestors and predecessors is a difficult task, but we have some hints to start a genealogical research.

Asher Hensel Wiesenthal from Skala, Galicia, Father of Simon Wiesenthal

We already saw this letter. The information I will add now is that the Wiesenthals were originally from Skala Podolska, a neighbouring town to Buczac. This will be important in a few slides.

Immediately after the war, on 14 January 1946, seventy years ago, Simon Wiesenthal communicated with David Wiesenthal from Brooklyn, New York, whom I mentioned earlier. David wrote that Simon Wiesenthal was looking for David, Gershom and Asriel. He stated that he was the David that Simon Wiesenthal was looking for, and that Gershom and Asriel were both dead. He asked Simon Wiesenthal to tell him more about Morris Rapp, who was from Simon Wiesenthal's maternal side related to his mother Rosa Rapp.

David and Simon Wiesenthal (Skala)

David Wiesenthal is Simon Wiesenthal's uncle. The picture demonstrates that they shared a lot of similarities. Over the years, Simon Wiesenthal was in close contact with David and his family in the United States. A few years ago, I met David's daughter-in-law, Sandy West, in Florida.

Uncle David Wiesenthal

From David's epitaph we learned that his father was named Shimon and thus Simon Wiesenthal, born in 1908, and was named after his late grandfather Shimon who passed away in 1906.

Front row (left to right): Ida Wiesenthal (wife of Jacob; my grandmother), Andrea Wiesenthal (granddaughter of Samuel; your grandpa; me (39 years ago!)), Ethel Wiesenthal Schwartz (my mother). Back: Melvin Schwartz (my dad); Jeanette Wiesenthal (wife of Edward); Rose Wiesenthal (wife of Benjamin); Jacob Wiesenthal (my grandpa, directly behind yours). (New York, 1967).

Sandy used to host family gatherings in her house in New Jersey. My genealogy friend Helene Kenvin-Schwartz took the pictures.

There was an extraordinary similarity between Simon and Helen's grandfather and grand-uncle. So far, however, we have not managed to prove the family relationship between these three men.

Family of Simon Wiesenthal

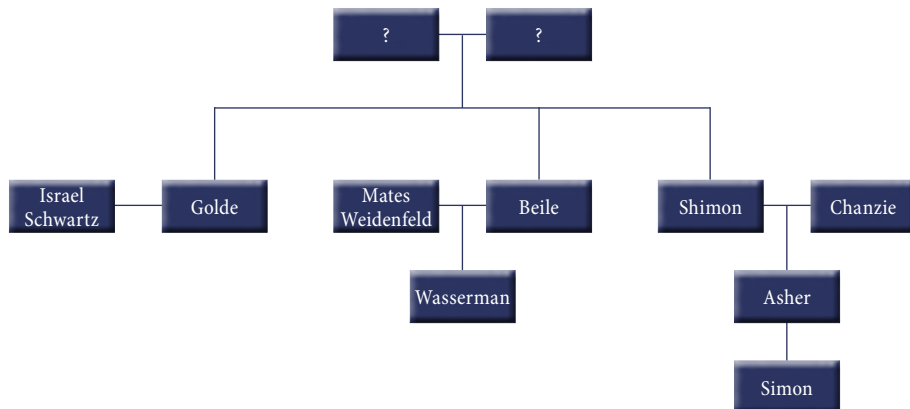

To sum up thus far, Simon, son of Asher, had four uncles (David, Gershom, Azriel and Zeide), only one of whom was still alive in 1946. He was the grandson of Shimon and Chanzie Wiesenthal.

Who else lived in house 27?

Golde and Beile Wiesenthal also lived in house number 27. Golde married Israel Schwartz; Beile married Mates Weidenfeld.

How did I detect Mates Weidenfeld & Beile Wiesenthal

Kudrynce bei Mielnica. So weit ich mich erinnern kann, war noch ein Cousin Weidenfeld in Trembowla und Wassermann in Skala. in Buczacz selbst lebte ausser mir noch ein Bruder meines Vaters. Beide Wiesenthals der Inhaber einer Bäckerei war. Ich war bis zum Jahre 1944 in Polen.

“As far as I can remember, there was another cousin Weidenfeld from Trembowla and Wasserman from Skala.”

(Simon Wiesenthal to Herman Wiesenthal, Ramat Gan, 1954)

I know so from personal letters. Simon wrote to Herman Wiesenthal about his cousin Weidenfeld from Skala.

The search for Weidenfeld was easy. Many Weidenfelds were murdered in the Shoah and their records can be found in the Yad Vashem database. On the left is a picture of Shlomo Weidenfeld near the grave of his mother, Beile Wiesenthal, the great-aunt of Simon Wiesenthal.

Dear Cousin:

I have kept in touch with some of the Wiesenthals - I think Israel Wiesenthal's sons - Jack Wiesenthal who lives in Boston - and I am writing to him today- and Max Wiesenthal - whom I am told moved to Texas. I know I will get some interesting information from Jack Wiesenthal, and when I hear from him, will certainly convey the information to you.

Abraham J. Schwartz wrote a letter to his cousin Simon Wiesenthal in which he stated that he kept in contact with some of the Wiesenthals.

Was Max Schwartz the son of Golde Wiesenthal and Israel Schwartz?

A family tree of Abraham Schwartz shows that Max Schwarz was his grandfather.

Simon Wiesenthal and his second cousins

Abraham Schwartz and Simon Wiesenthal were thus second cousins, related through their grandparents Golde and Shimon Wiesenthal, and so were Simon and Max Mermelstein, the grandson of Mates Weidenfeld.

They survived and they kept in touch!
